Interior

This Pumping station features some of the most spectacular ornamental Victorian cast ironwork there is. In the centre you will find a striking octagonal structure with highly decorated iron columns, supporting arched screen and an open well on the main floor. There are two ends to the space, one being restored and the other being rustic giving you varied filming opportunities within the same space. There are four giant beam engines. There are two further ancillary buildings including a workshop with working machinery. There is also a green room, kitchen, toilets, space for storage, and large entrance at road level to take bulky equipment through. It is located on a secure site with parking and a separate unit base.
