Interior

Lots of opportunities exist inside this expansive/outbuildings/grounds for filming and photo shoots.

In the main house there is a broad mixture of large rooms with period fireplaces, some with ornate plaster work on the walls and ceilings, and some with period furniture.

The rooms are decorated in a mixture of paint or old wallpaper patterns and could provide the backdrop for faking rooms in houses in other countries. Again, there is a blend of flooring types throughout the building. This ranges from original wood floorboards with large rugs/carpet, to marble, tiled and stone paved flooring.

Connecting the large formal rooms are long corridors (some are very wide with period fireplaces, carpet, furniture etc), and one which has wood panelled walls.

Under the building there is a large pillared cellar. This is easily accessed and has been cleaned up. This is another interesting space with vaulted ceiling.

In the former accommodation wing (quite representative of a hospital wing) there are a large number of rooms in derelict state (which have been used previously as production offices). These are connected with long corridors with lots of doors off them. Some of these corridors have lots of character, with bare plaster and/or peeling paint.

In the Stable Block, no longer home to any horses, there is a large courtyard with fountain in the middle. Some of the buildings are empty, and contain additional rooms which have lots of character. These rooms are slightly smaller than those in the main house, are presented empty (with varying state of distress) but still large enough for filming in, and have been for productions in the past.

In an adjacent building there is a large disused swimming pool. The building is in quite a distressed state, however this could be cleaned up, or used in its present condition. The pool could be cleaned and filled with water if required.

An additional large room (comparable size of a traditional school gymnasium) which has been used in the past, and could be used for filming or set-builds.

Exterior

The properties on the site are accessed from a long, single file private road (not suitable for high speed filming). There are open fields to either side of the road.

There is lots of parking available on site for support vehicles of all sizes.
