Interior

This period cottage offers a unique and quaint filming opportunity as it dates from around late 18th Century with the original building dating back to the 15th Century. It has resisted modernisation and it oozes character and charm. The ground floor features a stone floor throughout. There is a large living room with exposed beams, open fireplace and quirky nooks. There is another through lounge providing lots of light and making it easy for filming. The kitchen is rustic with basic white units and a small dining table. From here you go through the conservatory which has both stone and brick walls.

Upstairs there are several bedrooms, all of which are unmodernised and full of character.

Exterior

The cottage sits within a village setting and on its own one acre plot surrounded by countryside. There are large mature trees and lawned areas surrounding the property. Parking is available and the property is easily accessed.
